WE PAUSE TO REMEMBER

Dr. Early Lee Fox

... a student and a teacher at Randolph-Macon College for thirty-two years . . . He was a willing servant of his school community, his church and his country . . . Untiringly he gave of his efforts and of himself to make our world a better one in which to live . . . Long will his ideals be remembered and cherished by those whose privilege it was to know him . . . The memory of his helpfulness will be carried through many years by those whom he taught . . . He is a true son of Randolph-Mason . . . A son in whom we take much pride.

TAYLOR SANFORD

JACK SANFORD

When collegiate athletics returned to a pre-war level last fall, Athletic Director Taylor Sanford—who carried the burden of the coaching duties through World War II—was forced to strengthen his coaching staff in order to cope with the situations which came with the record-breaking student enrollment and by the middle of football season had developed a strong board of tutors. Besides his administrative duties as athletic director, Sanford continued as head coach in football, basketball, and baseball, but he obtained a strong group of assistants to aid him.

Bill Robertson—who served as assistant coach one year before entering the Navy—returned to the campus last summer. He coached the backfield during football season and then tutored the Yellow Jacket swimming and track teams.

Jack Sanford—brother of the Athletic Director and the third ex-University of Richmond great on the Jackets' coaching staff—came to the campus at the close of last year's baseball season and coached the B-squads in football and basketball before going back to the diamond wars.

During the gridiron season, Boyd Williams, center on the Richmond Professional football team, assisted Sanford in training the linemen.

Football - 1946

Resuming the gridiron wars last fall after a three year layoff due to World War II, Randolph-Macon found itself in the same plight which handicapped hundreds of small colleges across this nation in their renewal of football proceedings.

The Jackets' season record of three wins and seven defeats will not stand out in the sports annals of this state or nation, but the physical and mental benefit which every player received during the year make the football enterprise at Randolph-Macon a definite success.

Head Coach and Athletic Director Taylor Sanford—ably assisted by Bill Robertson who returned to the campus last summer after a three-year tour of duty in the Navy—had only six lettermen to report for opening practice. Using these former Jacket stars as a nucleus, Sanford went to work with some 50 newcomers to collegiate football—the majority of whom were veterans—to form the 1946 version of the Yellow Jackets. A lack of coaches to train such a large squad was only one of the many problems which faced the Jackets from the outset. However, early in October, the Randolph-Macon officials signed Jack Sanford—brother of the Head Coach—and Boyd Williams as Assistant Coaches, and the situation took on a brighter light as the existing problems were solved one by one.

From the opening practice session, Sanford was forced to stage a battle against time in his attempt to get the Yellow Jackets ready for their first game on September 21. For a fortnight, the Jackets held two workouts daily trying to round into top shape after a three year respite and to install a smooth working "T" formation.

With everyone realizing that the squad had not yet reached its peak, the Yellow Jackets made their debut for the 1946 campaign in Richmond's City Stadium by absorbing a 46-0 whipping from their arch rivals—the highly tutored University of Richmond Spiders. The following week-end, Coach Taylor Sanford matched his new "T" formation against Frank Dobson's "tried and proven" single-wing offense. Playing in Newport News, the Maconites still appeared jittery and allowed the Apprentice School gridders to amass 20 points before they could get their own offensive machine into operation. Trailing by this three touchdown margin at the intermission, the Jackets came back in the second half and for the first time in the season saw results come from their T-formed attack when they pushed across two tallies in the third period. However, the R-M squad was unable to overtake the Shipbuilders and bowed by a 20-13 count.

The first two week-ends in October brought no joy to Randolph-Macon as the Jackets went against strong elevens from the University of Delaware and Guilford College. The Lemon and Black boys were completely out of their class when they traveled to Newark, Delaware, and the Blue Hens took a 53-0 verdict for their 23rd consecutive victory. Going south into North Carolina on October 12, the Jackets found new life in the Tarheel state and outgained the Quakers in the air and on the ground, but the Guilford outfit capitalized on every break to send Sanford and his boys home with their fourth setback of the year.

The next week saw great improvement come to the Yellow Jackets both in their maneuvering and spirit on the gridiron, and on October 19, Randolph-Macon went to Death Valley to renew its traditional rivalry with Hampden-Sydney. The Jackets—rated as a two touchdown underdog—completely outplayed the Tigers, ruining the Bengal's Homecoming celebrations with a 6-0 victory.

With the savour of victory still on their tongues, the Maconites attempted to stay in their winning ways when they met Johns Hopkins in Baltimore on the last week-end in October. The Lemon and Black team contracted its first serious case of fumbleitis, and when the Medics at the Baltimore institution refused to consider the malady, John Hopkins had little difficulty in taking a 24-8 triumph.

The month of November brought the Yellow Jackets to their home grounds—Day Field—for the first time in the 1946 campaign. During the first six games, all of which were played away, the Yellow Jackets managed to use their stingers effectively only once, but better days were in store when they returned to Ashland to win two of their final four contests.

Opening the home stand on November 2, the Jackets staged their best performance of the year by trouncing Washington College, 32-7. Sanford's boys were the masters all the way, scoring at will and exhibiting both a strong aerial and overland assault. However, Randolph-Macon was again unable to stay in a winning fashion, and on the subsequent week-end, was overpowered by Western Maryland, 27-0.

The R-M Homecoming celebrations on November 16 were going according to schedule until midway the afternoon when the Jackets took the field against Hampden-Sydney for the second game of the season. But a return of the fumbleitis malady proved fatal to the Lemon and Black and the Tigers got revenge for the earlier setback by ruining the day's festivities with a 14-6 victory. The boys from Death Valley tallied twice in the opening half, but had to repulse numerous R-M scoring threats before taking the contest which was witnessed by a record-breaking crowd of 4,000 persons. Five times the Jackets drove inside Hampden-Sydney's 20-yard line, but five times something went wrong and Randolph-Macon was unable to push across the final stripe.

The Maconites brought the curtains down on the 1946 schedule on the following Saturday by taking a 14-13 win over Wofford College.

For the first time in many years, Randolph-Macon had Herculean power in the reserve ranks, and was able to field a B-squad. The Baby Jackets—tutored by Jack Sanford—had a fairly successful year by winning three games, losing two, and tying three.

Basketball 1946-'47

If Head Coach and Athletic Director Taylor Sanford could have found the solution for one major defect, the Yellow Jacket cagers' season record of eight wins and sixteen losses might easily have been reversed. Lack of height was the weakness which handicapped the Randolph-Macon basketball squad throughout the 1946-47 season and which many times turned possible victory into certain defeat. With this shortcoming staring them in the face every time they took the court, the Yellow Jackets, nevertheless, fought courageously and made a commendable showing in all twenty-four contests.

Randolph-Macon's starting team—popularly called "The Five Small Boys"—had only one cager who towered on the six feet mark; the other four regulars stood five feet eight inches and under. Despite their diminutive size, the Yellow Jackets were scrappy ball players and good shots from both the floor and foul line. Every man on the squad had real team spirit.

and after every setback, they came back more aggressive, more spirited, and more determined to shake off the losing jinx.

After only a week and a half of drills on the Alumni gymnasium hardwoods, the R-M quintet made its season's debut on December 6 by soundly thrashing a weak Union Theological Seminary team, 67-35. The Jackets were extremely accurate from the floor considering the short amount of practice which they had under their belts, and had little difficulty in overcoming the Theologians. On the versity outfit. The Washington boys won a 42-38 overtime contest from the Randolph-Macon team. Twenty-four hours later the Jackets stopped in at Baltimore and suffered their second conference defeat at the hands of Loyola. A strong second half rally gave the Greyhounds the 63-51 verdict.

The Jackets returned to their home floor on the 16th of December, but were still unable to break into the win column in league competition, bowing to a strong American University team, 51-48. A Maconite rally in the final following night, the Lemon and Black cagers—still a bit jittery from lack of experience—threw a scare at Gus Tebell and his Cavaliers for three quarters before the University of Virginia team managed to take a 55-43 verdict. The Jackets grabbed the lead early and held a 30-29 advantage at the intermission. Midway the second half, the Cavaliers broke away and the tired Yellow Jackets were unable to do much about it.

On the week-end of December 13, the Maconite five took to the road for the first time, stepping into Mason-Dixon conference competition against the Catholic University team. The Washington boys won a 42-38 overtime contest from the Randolph-Macon team. Twenty-four hours later the Jackets stopped in at Baltimore and suffered their second conference defeat at the hands of Loyola. A strong second half rally gave the Greyhounds the 63-51 verdict.

Resuming action during the first week of the new year, Coach Sanford's team racked up its third win by defeating the Medical College of Virginia cagers, 53-41, in Richmond. On the night of January 11, the Five Small Boys were still unable to capture their first conference game and were defeated by Johns Hopkins, 41-38. The local lads held the advantage for a good portion of this game, but height again proved to be the deciding factor and the Blue Jays from Baltimore had plenty of it.

Old man "Hard Luck" moved into the Jacket Gymnasium during the middle of January and the local cagers dropped two heartbreaking contests to Hampden-Sydney and Roanoke Colleges, both of which were Little Six tilts. The Jackets took a 22-14 halftime lead against Roanoke, but the Maroons knotted the count in the final minute of play, sending the battle into an overtime period. In the extra period, the R-M squad went ahead again, but Roanoke came back again to tie the count at 49-49. The Jackets showed signs of tiring in the second overtime period and the Maroons went on to take a 59-54 triumph. With this encounter still fresh in the minds of everyone, Randolph-Macon dropped another thrilling game to the Tigers from Death Valley two nights later. It was almost the same story again. The Jackets grabbed the lead early and held a six point advantage at halftime, but a final minute rally by the Tigers proved to be too much for the hapless Maconites and Hampden-Sydney won, 47-45.

After scoring their first conference win at the expense of Gallaudet, the Yellow Jackets returned home on the 21st of January, expecting to make a repeat performance over Medical College, but the Medicos surprised everyone (including themselves) and won, 34-28. Following a week layoff for mid-term exams, the R-M squad jumped back into M-D conference competition for four consecutive games, winning two and losing two. The Jackets defeated Towson College and Gallaudet, while bowing to strong teams from American University and Washington College.

During the middle of February, the Maconites fell into their losing ways again, suffering four straight setbacks

The R-M quintet then dropped an encounter to the strong Apprentice School five of Newport News, before chalking their third loop victory by defeating Bridgewater, 36-35, on a last minute foul shot.

Mr. Hard Luck was with the Yellow Jackets again when they traveled to Death Valley for a return engagement with the Tigers. The Jackets were masters of the situation throughout most of the game and held the lead until the final three minutes. A desperate rally in that period gave Hampden-Sydney a 52 to 47 verdict. Several nights later, Randolph-Macon clinched a berth in the M-D conference tournament by edging out Bridgewater, 49-41. In the final game on the schedule, the Maconites were defeated by the Spiders, 44-39, but only after the lead had changed hands before getting back on the victory road. On the night of the 12th, the Richmond Spiders threw a strong first half attack at the Jackets and won easily, 60-46, and two nights later Lynchburg got revenge for an early season loss by nipping the Maconites quintet, 42-30. While out in the western part of the State the Jackets also dropped their second tiff to the Roanoke Maroons who came up with a strong second half rally.

five times and the Jackets had thrown quite a scare at the Richmond five.

In the loop tourney, which was held in Washington the first week-end in March, the Jackets were eliminated in the opening round by Johns Hopkins.

Captain Roland Bodtke led the Yellow Jackets in the scoring department during the season with 216 points, while Bob Sprenger was runner-up with 182.

Baseball dreams that had been lingering under these oaks and maples for many years came true last spring when the diamond wizardry of Taylor Sanford produced a Yellow Jacket nine which won the State 1946 baseball championship.

It was the first time the coveted crown has had its seat on the campus in the history of Randolph-Macon.

After dropping the first three games on their schedule, the fast stepping Yellow Jackets found the right bats and racked up eleven straight victories to take the State title. This string of wins included two smashing triumphs over the University of Richmond, one over Hampden-Sydney, and one over William & Mary.

Boasting no long and heavy hitters, the Lemon and Black squad relied on timely singles, a skillful bunting attack, and superb base running to manufacture most of its tallies. The pitching staff, composed of Syd Thrift, Paul Isenberg, and B. H. Wright, gave the Maconites as good a defense as any ball club needed. Thrift—a lanky, southpaw freshman—had a season's record of six wins and no defeats and was chosen on the All-State team.

In the hitting department, the Jackets pounded out 154 hits for 99 runs in their 14-game campaign to give a team batting average of .342. Don Flippin led the individual batting with a .520 average and was chosen as an outfielder on the All-State squad.

However, with all the good statistics and star players in mind, much credit is due to the catching genius of Taylor Sanford, a long-time star on Minor League diamonds.

Swimming

On December second, a call was issued for local talent to join the first Yellow Jacket swimming team since 1942. In response, some twenty-five men reported to Point-dexter Memorial Pool to begin working in preparation for a nine meet schedule card which was to open on January 17.

Before the Christmas holiday, the watermen worked out each day by practicing turns and starts, swimming laps for wind capacity and developing their strokes. At the close of the pre-holiday drills the swimming mentor, Assistant Coach Bill Robertson announced the divisions of his 25 proteges into the seven positions of a team and then instructed them to devote the entire workout time to their respective positions.

On January 17, the tankers make their 1947 debut with a bang when they took first place in every event and easily defeated their foes from Roanoke College 53½-11½ in the local natatorium.

In the following week, however, the Jackets found themselves on the short end of a 39-27 score when they battled a stronger and more experienced team from Loyola College. In the locker room before this first loss of the season the tankers had elected Bob Karoly and Bob Chisholm to captain their team throughout the 1947 schedule.

During the first three weeks in March the natators took to the road for three successive meets in foreign waters.

In the first, with William & Mary, Norfolk Division, the tankers were once again defeated 42-33 in first collegiate meet held in the Indians' pool in two years.

VPI's tankers with three years of experience behind them found little difficulty in defeating a three-month-old Randolph-Macon team 44-22 in the second of the three trips. The Jackets managed to capture only two first places in the eight event card.

Returning from VPI, the local sprinters stopped off at Roanoke to give the college a return match, and left with their second win of the season, this time 53-12, dropping only ½ point from their first victory.

On February 28 and March 1st, the Jackets traveled to Richmond to compete with the top natators of the field in the Annual State Collegiate Swimming Meet held in the Richmond Central YMCA. Kenneth Holloway reached the finals in the diving event and Howard Levy in the breast-stroke, however, Levy was the only one of the team to capture a single point, and Randolph-

Macon tankers found themselves in last place.

Returning to the local waters after three weeks of travel, the Jackets eked out a 39-36 victory over William & Mary Extension in Norfolk to cap their third win of the season and even the score at 3 wins and 3 losses for their schedule of inter-collegiate meets.

The local strokers closed the 1947 campaign with a trip to Newark, De'aware, for the Mason-Dixon conference swimming meet. The competition there was as keen as that in the state meet and the Jackets managed to take only seven points, which left them in fifth place.

When the season ended, the majority of the strokers kept right on swimming and will be practicing until next September when workouts will begin once again for a team that is determined to win the State crown.

With a year of practice under their belts, the Jacket tankers will steadily climb in the ranks of Virginia swimming competition, paced by such men as Howard Levy—who lost first place in only one meet this year—and Bob Chisholm—who captured more honors than any other starter.
